A TRIBUTE

Margaret Langille, '39

Perhaps the thing most essential to a student's happiness and success in later life is the near presence during his high school career of an understanding friend.

We, who had the privilege of working under the guidance of Miss Relli, found in her just such a friend—a person who gave freely of her knowledge, of her profession, and of herself.

As an artist she possessed exceptional ability, and was as talented in one phase of her field as in another. Her love for her work was evident in the enthusiasm and interest she displayed in everything beautiful.

Nor were her artistic accomplishments confined only to drawing and painting. A lover of music, she was a gifted pianist, having studied under private teachers for several years.

Also, she had a keen interest in literature and travel. Her artistic talent, her versatility, and her background in the fine arts form a record of which anyone might be justly proud, and one which gave promise of a brilliant future.

It was with a deep sadness that we resumed our Art work this spring without Miss Relli to guide us, but our lives will be the richer because we have known her and had her for a friend.

FOREWORD

Joan Fallon, '39

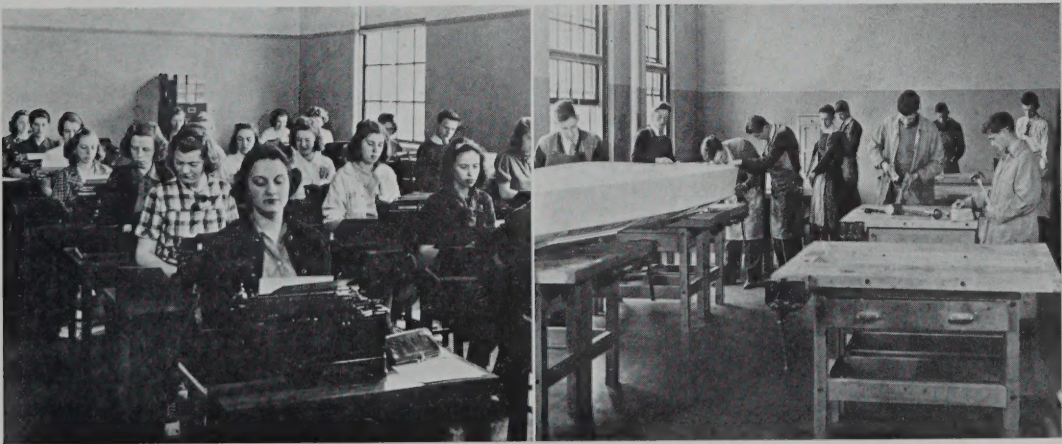

This year the arrangement of the "Advocate" is somewhat different, and the change in its appearance may come as a surprise to some. We hope if there is a surprise, that it will be a pleasant one.

One very important reason for a change in the "Advocate" this year is the size of the graduating class. It is the largest Senior class in the history of the school and for this reason the Senior portfolio will be larger than ever before.

It is only when we stop to think of the student activities in Needham High School, that we realize the number of changes and additions that have been made in the last few years. For instance our golf team is a fairly recent addition and also the Library Club. Most recent of all, however, are the verse-speaking choir, the dance group, and the band. Since it is the duty of all periodicals to keep abreast of the times, we have felt the need of publishing the merits of our new activities, and in the "Advocate" we do this by photographs. The popular cry this year was for more photographs and to satisfy it we made a reduction in the number of pages devoted to the literary department. Thus, it may be seen that our literary section is smaller than in previous issues.

Another difference may be apparent in the omission of editorials. We thought this year, that a simple foreword supplemented by photographs would be a pleasant change and make our magazine more interesting.

We hope these changes will appeal to the students of Needham High School, and that the "Advocate" is improved by them.

A Story for Janie

Dorothy Whitehead, '39

Tonight it is very, very cold outdoors; the wind has the bite and sting of a whip; the stars and new moon shine brightly on the clear, black curtain of night. But I am very comfortable and very much contented as I sit before my cozy fire with my granddaughter's sunny head at my knee. She is holding a two weeks' old kitten on her lap and is gently stroking its fine, silky fur with her long, beautifully shaped fingers. Abruptly she looks up at me and asks if I will tell her a story.

"This is just the night for a story, Nana, and it has been so very long since you last told me one. Tonight it seems as though I were a little girl once again and not a grown college girl. I can remember so well the last story you told me. It was about Hansel and Gretel and the witch an' the sugar roof an' everything. Oh, please, Nana."

I looked down into her pleading eyes, — yes, they're really pleading. "Oh, Janie, you're so dear to me."

"All right, Janie. My mind has grown dimmer since then but if you can overlook that, I'll see what I can find to tell you." And this is the story that I told.

H was only a little mid-western town, a stopping place for all kinds of people, and was noted particularly as a one-night stand for traveling stock companies.

Main Street was the "main stem," so to speak, and had the usual drug, drygood, and grocery stores, the hotel, theatre, Baptist Church, library, and Junior High School all in a string like most small towns.

Farther down this busy street was a brown, ramshackle sort of place, over whose door hung a dirty white sign announcing in bold, black letters—McCleary's Boarding House. Nellie McCleary couldn't afford to fix up the outside appearances, but inside everything was spic and span and fairly shone with cleanliness. She had all her rooms filled, and, even though some of her boarders weren't just what she wanted, she couldn't complain; they paid their rent and caused no trouble. There was Jeff Cox, the smart-aleck reporter for the Gazette, who always spilt gravy on the clean cloth and was crazy about Cherry Dugan, the cashier at the self-service store, also another boarder; Mary Kelley, the shy little public stenographer at the hotel, who secretly loved Jeff; Bart Green, the art student who had a fortune in talent but no money, and who wore his heart on his sleeve in hope that Mary would see it; Therese Bournio, who was "going to crash Broadway soon;" Dick Breen, the garage mechanic at Ed's Service Station who won the T. W. A. photography contest and got a free trip to Hollywood; and then — Shelby Warren.

Shelby was a lovely, starry-eyed girl with a beautiful smile and a certain wistfulness that betrayed a faith in Grimm and a belief that there were such things as Prince Charmings in the world today. She was studying piano with Mr. Zimmermann and shared a room with Mary Kelley, her only confidante and true friend. She was obviously a misfit in this place, but it was all she could afford.

One evening, when they were all at supper, a striking young man with an Apollo face and physique and a suitcase stepped into the dimly lighted hallway. Mrs. McCleary wiped her mouth with her napkin and went out to greet him.

"Good evening, madam," he said politely, holding his hat in his hand and bowing slightly. His swift glance showed him that the living quarters were very good and that there were a few other boarders. "Have you room to spare for another lodger? I've come quite a distance and I'm very tired." He had a delightful accent.

"Well — now," she said hesitating, "I haven't a single room to give you. If you wouldn't mind sharing with someone else, I could take you." She looked into the dining-room and tucked in a stray wisp of hair. "Oh Dick, come here a minute."

In a few minutes they decided that Lance Fredericks would share Dick's room, and a place was soon set for him at the table directly opposite Shelby. During introductions, Shelby gave him a warm smile, and as their eyes met, each experienced an exciting tingle which left them both a little breathless.

After the meal, Shelby went alone into the parlor to practice. She had only played a short time when she caught Lance's eyes in the mirror. He was standing in the doorway with a smoking cigarette between his fingers, watching her with a rapt expression, yet listening with a critical ear. He advanced slowly.

"Such artistic execution I've never heard before. You're quite a pianist."

"I hope to be some day."

"You mean you're going in for it professionally?"

"Yes." He sat down beside her.

"You ought to get out of a small place like this right away — go somewhere — say New York — where you can be recognized. You're just being held back here."

They talked long and seriously about her future. During this time, also, she learned that he wrote and had had several of his stories accepted by nationally known magazines; now he was working on a novel and was staying here at H . . . in search of local color. When she retired, she lay awake a long time, aware of a subtle change inside her — a sudden, mysterious force which left her a little breathless and confused. She couldn't get the face of Lance Fredericks out of her mind; but, at last, she went to sleep, still thinking of him. She didn't know that Lance, too, was tossing and turning in his bed, disturbed by a similar feeling.

In the next two weeks that strange interest turned into a love that was deep and overpowering and of which neither had thought himself capable. But the time soon came when Lance must leave. Their last evening together — for God knows when — was spent high up on Dearing Hill where the lookout tower stood pale and silvered with dew in the moonlight.

They stood there for a long minute just staring at each other, as though they couldn't tear their eyes away. Then Shelby felt both her hands in his; the touch tingled like an electric impulse. She tried to speak; but her voice clogged in her throat; she felt shaken and deeply stirred. Then, not knowing how it happened, they were locked in each other's arms. He kissed her long and ardently and then his arms relaxed. He moistened his lips.

"Shelby," he groaned, his voice tense with emotion, "I love you, desperately — but it mustn't be. I had no right to get into a thing like this — something so big and beautiful — but yet, which I mustn't touch."

Surprised, Shelby looked searchingly at him, her lips parted, her eyes misty, "I don't understand, Lance."

I can't hide it any longer, I suppose," he said haltingly. "I nearly went crazy trying to get you out of my mind — to escape from the clutches of this thing that drew me to you like a magnet. He paused, looking at her with anguished eyes. "Shelby — I love you — but, I can never marry you because I-I'm the Prince of Hertzavia."

Shelby swayed slightly on her feet but remained rooted to the spot. The Prince of Hertzavia! Swift flashes shot through her mind — Grimm — the Prince Charming — she knew they fell in love with girls out of their class and it had happened to her. Lance — the Prince of Hertzavia.

Her lower lip quivered and from between half-open lips she murmured, "My dear." Lance made as if to embrace her, but she put up her hand. She walked away slowly and he followed her at an equal pace. They spoke no word until they reached the bottom of the hill. Here, she turned to him.

"Lance —"

"Shelby, I'd rather die than go on living without you. What I'd give to be just a plain, ordinary man with the right to do for you as I want to!"

"Lance, I understand, and all our grief will not make conditions any better. Your position and duty may take you from me, but we'll have an undying love that on one nor anything can take away. Now, please, let me walk on alone. It is better that we do not say goodbye; you will have gone before I wake and we shall be spared the parting. One kiss — goodnight!"

Two days later, a newer and sadder Shelby Warren stopped at the drug store on Main Street for a Gazette. As she unfolded it, blazing headlines danced before her eyes. "Prince Anton Killed" and there, the picture beneath the headlines — Prince Anton of Hertz — Lance! "Prince Anton of Hertzavia, traveling incognito, accidentally shot during a gangster break in New York. They were on their way to Sing Sing when—" She heard a buzzing in her ears as of a swarm of bees, then giddiness and dense blackness.

"Oh, Nana!" breathed Janie. "What a sad story and yet—how strangely beautiful. What happened then to Shelby?"

"She studied the piano earnestly, then went to New York when she had saved enough money. She married her teacher, who loved her very much, but he understood her story and knew that his love could never be returned as it was given. She had given her all to her one and only great love. They had one child, a girl, who brought them great happiness."

"I'm glad she didn't live alone all her life with just memories," Janie remarked, her face radiantly beautiful in the ember glow. "Why, Nana — you're crying!"

I couldn't see her — yet I smiled through my tears.

"Yes, dear — you see, I'm Shelby."

Arbutus

M. Langille, '39

So frail
And fairylike,
In pink-hued gown, you hide
In mossy dell from eager hands
That grasp.

The Lone Eagle, a Pioneer

M. Langille, '39

It takes a valiant heart and brave,
To be a pioneer.
So many hazards we must face,
To life that we hold dear.

He faced uncertainty alone,
Undaunted in his aim
To conquer mighty tide and cloud,
For fellow-men, not fame.

He flew the broad expanse of sea,
The eagle's path alone.
For two long days and nights no sound,
Save for his motor's drone.

He landed at Le Bourget Field,
Successful in his aim.
The whole wide world was at his feet,
With praise and glad acclaim.

Distinction comes to many men,
Who never cross the sea,
But few can cast their fame aside
As modestly as he.

It is to men like him we owe,
Our progress every year.
A pedestal on which we place
Another pioneer!

A Birch Tree

David Lovering, '39

You stand upon the sloping hill of green
Or underneath a covered bridge in Maine,
Unnoticed. Nature's beauty never seen
Except by those who seek it in the rain.
Your slender figure budding from its youth,
Stands straight and proud and true amongst them all.
Your tender arms reach out, not yet
 uncouth,
To spread some beauty in the months of fall.
Blow winds! You cannot blow this sapling down!
For it's to be Dame Nature's beck'ning call,

To see the wond'rous beauty 'round the town;
When first comes up from evening's rest,
 Old Sol.
A birch alone is quiet as can be,
But with the wind he plays a symphony.

David and Goliath

Janet Thomas, '39

In soft, green fields the sheep did feed
 Beside a quiet brook,
A lad named David—stripling youth—
 Watched o'er them with his crook.

The youngest son of four was he,
 Perchance his mother's pet;
Too young to fight in Israel's wars,
 A fact he did regret.

Then came the bold Philistines, hot
 To conquer Israel,
Saul's men went out to meet the foe
 And this is what befell.

Young David, sent to carry food,
 To Israel's army small;
His boyish song gave way to rage
 That this should so befall.

The hugh Goliath, armored all
 In heavy brass, stepped out.
"Come on, come on," he loudly called,
 "Who'll try me in a bout?"

Saul's men were frightened by the sight
 And no one gave a sign,
"Let me, let me," cried David bold.
 "Did I not stay the lion?"

Then, armed with but a flimsy sling,
 And 'fore they said him no,
He leaped ahead, took aim and sped
 A missile at his foe.

Goliath dodged—too late was he.
 Young David's aim was true,
The giant fell upon the ground
 In death, with none to rue.

Congratulations, Copper!

Edna Cole, '40

The room was a detective's office. Pictures of prize-fighters adorned the walls, and cigar and cigarette butts lay in the numerous ashtrays. A scarred maple desk sported detective magazines and an old-fashioned telephone.

A fugitive from the comic strips sat behind the desk, the familiar derby hanging on the back of his head. Fragrant, powerful odors issued from his five-cent cigar.

The telephone rang, and with his feet sprawled nonchalantly over the top of his desk and his thumb under his vest, he answered the call. He promised aid and called to a young man whose face showed eager anticipation at the thought of his first assignment. Gosh, he hoped it was a robbery!

"Say, Copper, the Baker's Biscuit Association want us 'dreat big mans' to find a girl. It's your job," the derby-hatted man said, slightly disgusted.

"Oh, yeah," replied his young friend indignantly. "I'm a detective, see? I get burglars and robbers, and my motto isn't 'cherchez la femme'!"

"Nevertheless, my young apprentice, you are hereby assigned to it," answered the boss. "It appears that at a radio broadcast last night, a girl substituted for Drita Marlo, the star. Came right up out of the audience and said she'd sing. Well, old man Barton paid her and thanked her without even asking her name. The dumb cluck! So it seems this girl makes a hit, see? And then this guy Barton gets telegrams from his rival asking for the girl, and his boss telling him to sign up that girl, or else——! So it seems they can't find the girl and not knowing who she is and Barton not remembering what she looks like, you can see the mess. Good-luck, Copper."

"I still see no reason for sending me on a girl-hunt," replied his friend in disgust. He departed, slamming the office door behind him. A sports roadster, won in a cigarette slogan contest, stood at the curb. He drove away, leaving a puff of dust behind him.

He went to the studio building and asked questions of the call boy, janitor, and technicians. Nobody knew who the girl was. As he stepped out of the elevator the attendant attracted his attention.

"Say, do you know who she is?" Copper inquired.

"I might," replied the cautious youth, "and I might not."

"Okay, here," offered the detective and he laid a bill in the boy's hand.

"Well, you know de dame what sat beside de girl in the audience? Yeah, her. She comes to every broadcast and me and her gets chummy. She lives up on Vermont Street, a widder name of Garrison. I seen her talking wid de girl, so I figgered dey might know each udder," confided he. Mrs. Garrison proved to be Jennifer Finden's aunt with whom she had stayed during her visit. She'd gone home to the farm where she lived.

Copper set out in his roadster. Ah, a day in the country communing with nature! This was the life. He found himself on a dusty road fringed with fading wild roses and fern, and bordered with groves of tall oaks and green-leaved maples. A bluebird, his breast swelled with singing, sat on the branch of a silver birch. A jay's raucous call came from the wood. The sun shone warm and friendly. He passed placid brown cows feeding in green pastures, pigs wallowing in the mud of their sty, and farmers in their fields.

The afternoon waned and, at that inopportune time that the sun begins to set, the inevitable happened. The flashy roadster refused to go any further. The gas meter registered empty. He thought philosophically that a night spent in this region would be pleasant, but a gnawing in the region of his abdomen informed him that he had not eaten since morning.

He followed a footworn path through a wood and emerged on the edge of a corn-field. Through the stalks he saw the conventional white rambling farmhouse. Morning glories graced the back porch, and rambler roses twined up the pillars of the front porch. He walked on. The cluck of hens, and the boast of roosters announced bedtime among the poultry. A tiger cat sat on a clothes post, blinking in the last rays of the setting sun. A girl came out of the house and stopped in surprise. The young man introduced himself as Martin Crane, a hungry fellow whose car had run out of gas. He noticed with satisfaction that her hair shone as golden as the corn tassels he had seen, and her eyes reminded him of the brown-eyed Susans by the back door. She dimpled and invited him in.

After an enjoyable supper in the spotlessly clean kitchen, Jen and Martin Crane retired to the old-fashioned front parlor. Jen seated herself at the piano and sang as was her regular evening custom. Mr. Crane leaned against the piano and thought how beautiful she was. When she finished, she looked up.

"Thank you. That was lovely, Miss Done," he said in true admiration.

"I'm glad you liked it. But my name isn't Done. You see, when I was young my parents died and my uncle and aunt took me in. They've always been father and mother to me," she explained. The young man appeared puzzled.

"What is your name, then?" he inquired.

"Linden, Jennifer Linden," answered the girl simply.

The next morning a young man walked into a detective's office whose walls were covered with pictures of pugilists. The fugitive from the comic strips still sat behind the desk.

"Good morning, Copper," said the man, removing the cigar from his mouth.

"Say, boss, would you just as soon not send me on any more girl-hunts?"

"Why not, my young apprentice?"

"Well, I married the girl I found yesterday and I wouldn't want it to happen again."

"Married! haw, haw. When I think of how you kicked when I put you on the job—haw, haw. Congratulations, Copper!" said the man whose derby now lay on the floor.

The Recruit

Donald Allan, '39

'Twas fine the day I listened, lad,
And got my silver piece;
My brand new uniform I donned,
Dress coat and trousers creased.

"A dashing fellow," sure says I,
As I walked the village street.
Napoleon never looked so grand,
Nor copper on his beat.

And so from scenes of home to camp
I went my happy way,
Well pleased with all I'd seen and done
And with my grand display.

But when to camp at last I came,
My day of glory gone,
They took my swanky suit away
And gave me another one.

A suit of blue and shabby fit,
The Sergeant gave to me.
"Go 'long and get into these duds
And no back talk," says he.

Though years have come, lad, years have gone,
And many sights I've seen,
I'll ne'er forget the day I spent
On parade on the village green.

Women in the White House

Joan Fallon, '39

The other day I was glancing through the newspaper, when I suddenly became conscious of the fact that there are many feminine names in high positions. There are women in Congress and there are women judges, but above all, there is a woman cabinet member. Before I realized it, the awful thought came to me that perhaps some day there might be a woman president. If you consider the tremendous strides women have made in all the various professions and use these strides as a scale for your conjectures, a woman president does not seem impossible. Suppose, in order to understand the significance of this revolutionary thought, we consider it from various angles.

First of all, comes the question of the campaign. Can you imagine the dilemma of a political party faced with a female opponent? Mud-slinging is, of course, out of the question. The whole party would be denounced as an organization composed of cads and bounders who would sling mud at an innocent woman. Their defeat would be a foregone conclusion. But to be chivalrous might also be fatal, for then also would the contest favor the lady in question. This situation would doubtless be one of the most disturbing elements caused by a female presidential candidate.

Then since one cannot discuss presidents without bringing in the manly sport of fishing, another problem is presented. It requires much mental agility to imagine a stout, gray-haired, be-spectacled, middle-aged woman battling with a huge tuna some miles off the coast of Florida. Everyone knows that fishing is a sport that necessitates a certain amount of self-expression not of the type usually heard in the best places. So we find our president also faced with a problem, that of an almost stifling desire for unlady-like speech as against a consideration of the opinion of her voters. After many of these virtue-testing fishing trips it is conceivable that our president's whole outlook on life might undergo a bitter change.

Another problem to be faced arises with the question of fire-side chats. We could hardly expect to see our president speaking to her public from an easy-chair and her husband knitting by the fire-side. It doesn't seem logical, and yet conventions must be observed. We Americans, also, must revere tradition.

Still another problem is encountered through the Supreme Court appointments. Surely our president must be loyal to her sex, but can a Supreme Court be a Supreme Court without a beard among its justices? If our president were to be loyal to her sex in her appointments, our Supreme Court would sit as a beardless court, and thus we have another problem.

And last but not least, we must contend with the problems involving our president's cabinet. To make clear one difficulty, let us picture a scene that might take place at a cabinet meeting.

The president and all her secretaries are present except the Secretary of War who seems to be unavoidably detained. The president and her cabinet are working quietly on the national debt. For the sake of diplomacy let us say quietly, instead of frantically, since somewhere the Secretary of the Interior has misplaced two billion dollars. Suddenly the door is thrown open, and the Secretary of War stands on the threshold. She is waving a copy of the Federal Shopping News.

"Girls," she exclaims dramatically, "there is a hat sale down at Steiner's, and there aren't many hats left."

A second later the room is empty. The national debt and the misplaced two billion dollars are forgotten. You can't blame any of these executives. A sale is something no woman can forego. It is inherent and instinctive to take advantage of sales, and yet it presents another problem to the many already amassed.

I do not feel authorized to criticize or applaud women in politics. As to electing a woman to the office of the presidency, I feel it is up to the future to decide. For my part I have merely enumerated some of the problems that seem most outstanding to me. I offer no opinion on a woman's holding the presidency but merely add that if one is elected, I shall sail for Europe.

Rabbit Stew

William Hutcheson, '40

"Where am I?" Dick was ashamed of himself for thinking such a silly story book phrase, even though his memory helped him little in explaining what he was doing in such a cold, deserted cabin. His first attempt to rise was foiled by a sharp pain starting in his right leg and shooting through his whole body ending in screaming whistles in his tired brain. Immediately the young man remembered the crash and the darkness that followed. As there was nothing to do but stay where he was, Dick started at the far end of the cabin and searched every cranny with his sharp young eyes. Small clouds of smoke belched from the dying embers in the huge fireplace, half going up the leaky chimney and half making the air in the room increasingly stuffy. From one side of the fireplace hung a large iron pot suspended from a rusty, hinged hook. The pot gave off the odor of delicious rabbit stew cooked New England style. Varying cracks between the rough logs were stuffed cleverly with old rags, while pine pitch went for making the split log-roof weather proof. In the center of the floor was an immense bear rug, and around it was grouped a variety of pellets from smaller animals. Rags also were stuffed in the cracks between the heavy oak door and its lopsided frame. The scanty furniture of the dwelling included the home-made cot on which Dick lay, a few rough stools, and a small table over in one corner. On this table, which seemed to be used for a dozen purposes, stood a picture of a very beautiful girl which immediately caught Dick's eye. On the whole the cabin was quite attractive—exceptional for such a "backwoods" district.

At this point in the examination of the room Dick's sleepy eyelids got the better of him and he drowsed off into a restless sleep. Dick's reverie was very rudely interrupted in about half an hour by the loud clumping of hobnailed boots and the creaking of loose boards. The intruder turned out to be the owner of the cabin, a large burly fellow who went nonchalantly about the task of preparing his midday meal with not so much as a glance toward his guest. As Dick was very anxious to know what had happened between the crash and the present moment, he was very much annoyed at his host's lack of interest.

To draw the old fellow's attention, he finally subdued his pride and turning on his side groaned as if in pain, "Where am I?"

Turning slowly on his heel, his host strode slowly up to the cot and said, "Say, young fella, I guess I'm the one to be asking the questions, but, before I begin shooting them at you, you better believe that you're lucky you ain't flirtin' with the angels this very minute. How in tarnation you sat that flying crate down on that two by four opening I'll never know. Now, to get down to business, who are you and where did you come from, anyhow?"

"My name's Dick Morgan and I came from Boston," the young pilot answered hastily. And then in order to please the old man, he continued, "I was flying north to meet my father when something happened to the motor."

"Well," the trapper smiled grimly, "you certainly picked a nice place to come down. There ain't another cabin within five miles of here and the nearest town is more than fifteen. I reckon you'll have to stand old Dan Stanley's company for at least a month." Young Morgan found this information anything but comforting, but after getting down some of the rabbit stew, he felt much better.

Little by little during the next three weeks the leg increased in strength and Dick was able to struggle about the cabin on a pair of home-made crutches. Every chance he got he would worm out a little more of the old trapper's life story. It seemed that at one time Stanley was quite a prosperous owner of a small factory in New Hampshire. As fate would have it, a down-and-out, long-lost friend appeared whom Dan took in as a partner. Since the friend had been away for some time Dan didn't know what kind of fellow he was and became the innocent victim of his plot. In order not to be arrested and disgrace his beloved niece, Dan left town and became the lonely hermit as Dick had found him. Old Dan talked much of his pretty niece and partly because of this and partly because he was very much interested in the case, Dick vowed to help remedy the situation.

The fourth week! Now the time had come to part. Dick's leg had healed and enough furs had been collected for Dan to make the trip to town. The dogs were hitched up. Dick was made comfortable in the sled, and the two men started on the long trip. They spoke hardly a word all the way, but both of them were thinking of the days past and the pleasant company of the other. At the railroad station they parted, and as the young fellow boarded the smoky little train a large tear rolled down Dan's thick beard.

The next few weeks were very lonely for the poor trapper, for the friendly companionship of the boy had made it even harder to live alone. Dan began to believe that Dick had forgotten him and that he had promised to return so as not to hurt his feelings. The days dragged on and on, and sometimes Dan was so miserable that even thoughts of suicide entered his head.

One evening while returning to his lonely haunt in the depths of despair Dan spied snowshoe tracks leading directly up to the cabin door. Suddenly a thought raced through him that made him rock in his boots. "The Police!" Dan was a man who believed in facing the worst, and therefore marched up to the door and boldly pushed it back on its leather hinges. The sight that met his staring eyes sent another shock through his massive body. There before him stood his niece with his young friend Dick.

That evening grouped around a huge pot of rabbit stew sat three very happy people. The two youngsters had brought the news that Dan was cleared from all suspicion and was again the owner of the Stanley Manufacturing Company. A trick of fate had again shaped three people's lives.

Success

Sybil Harris, '39

I saw a timid fern push through moist ground.
All pale and trembling, wearied from the fight,
Yet happy 'neath a fuzzy cap, and found
Nearby, a ring of flowers decked in white.
A silver streamlet passed that way, to turn Through reeds, through tender grass, and softly lap
Around that stumbling, tired little fern
As though to coax it from beneath its cap.
Encouraged thus, it struggled toward the sky
Up past the grasping weeds. Small leaves uncurled
And stretching, working, slowly grew up high,
Till tiny lacy patterns were unfurled
And flung in grand array against the trees
And grasses gently bathed in full fresh breeze.

The Offender

Allison Ringer, '40

George Darien was a teller in a large bank. He was a dapper little man of about fifty years, short and thin. His hair, what there was of it, was always well-combed and his clothes were all neat and well-kept. Everything about him was orderly. He was a law-fearing man and never drank nor smoked. In short, he was a model man.

One day at about four-thirty in the afternoon, George, as a matter of habit, left the bank and took the street-car which went by his apartment. But this time something happened to the car about a block from his destination. It stopped and couldn't be started, and a few minutes later a man came to the car and spoke to the driver. George was sitting near them and heard something to the effect that a wire was down. So he got off and walked the rest of the way.

Mrs. Browning, his landlady, opened the door for him. "Well, Mr. Darien, you're late tonight," she said.

"Yes," he admitted, "but on the way home something happened to the streetcar. I heard someone say something about a wire being down so I got off and wah—Oh dear, this is terrible!" he moaned, and a look of dismay spread over his face.

"Why, Mr. Darien, what on earth's the matter with you?" she exclaimed.

George looked at her a moment crestfallen and then said woefully, "I didn't pay my fare!"

Later that night he was trying to read a book, but he couldn't dismiss the incident! It was entirely his fault and he blamed himself for it. He should have remembered his money, and, also, he had walked away right in front of the conductor. Now for the first time, in his life, he had committed a crime; even if it concerned only ten cents.

The next afternoon he walked out of the bank with his briefcase but he took a street-car going in the opposite direction from that which he usually took. He was nervous and had good cause to be. In his briefcase he had fifty thousand dollars. He had robbed the bank. But why not? He had committed a crime the day before and therefore was a criminal. And a criminal is a criminal no matter what the crime. Therefore, why not commit a real crime? The money would last him the rest of his life. He had deliberately shut his conscience out and by now his naturally honest scruples were too shocked to resist.

He traveled all night, and the next day he took an apartment in a hotel in a small, distant city. By some coincidence the manager looked faintly like the bank president. The elevator boy, too, seemed to resemble the bank messenger. As he had brought nothing but his briefcase with him, there were many things which he had to buy. When he walked into one store a battery of salesmen stepped forward, and he almost felt like shrinking back because they so much resembled the board of directors at the bank.

Later that day after making a number of purchases, he was walking down the street when suddenly a hand fell on his shoulder, and he turned, dismayed, to find a policeman behind him. He was about to surrender peaceably, when the man spoke. "Here's your briefcase, buddy. You left it in that store back there." It was with surprise and relief that he took it, but, on thanking the policeman, he noticed how much he looked like the night-watchman at the bank. George went back to his apartment, and, though he knew that it was his conscience that made him think these people looked familiar, yet he was worried. That night he couldn't sleep, and the next day he was exhausted. He got up but could hardly recognize himself in the mirror. Later, thinking some fresh air would help, he went out for a walk, but after seeing a few bank presidents, directors, and several depositors, in other people, he felt worse than ever.

For several days this went on. He couldn't sleep at night and he was "haunted" in the daytime. By this time he was almost a mental and physical wreck. He thought more and more about giving himself up. His picture was in every paper, but as he had grown a small mustache and begun a Van Dyke, he felt safe enough.

Then one day he was walking down the street when he noticed a man dressed in plain clothes who seemed to be following him, and who looked like the policeman on the beat at the bank. George walked a little faster. So did the other man. Then there were two of them, then three, and more and more of them kept coming. George started to run, and more people came from all directions: the whole bank force, policemen, depositors, his landlady, were chasing him. Even dogs that looked like dogs he knew, joined the chase.

He was running at top speed now when suddenly the street ended and he was running down a wharf. When he got to the end, he closed his eyes and jumped. He fell and fell and finally he hit. There was no splash.

He lay on the floor where he had fallen and looked at the papers on the floor. He had been holding his briefcase upside down and sleep—running. Finally he looked up. There was no crowd, no wharf, no city. He was in his own apartment at home. He got up gingerly and looked in a mirror. No mustache, no Van Dyke. There were nothing but bank papers in his briefcase. Came the dawn.

It was six o'clock in the morning, but he made a quick decision, and walked to the offices of the street-car company to pay the fare he had forgotten the night before. He pounded on the door and finally roused the night watchman. Needless to say, when the watchman found what he had been called for, he probably thanked George very warmly.

But George didn't let it go to his head. He went to work that day, but spoke a timid greeting to everyone until he got used to the idea that he had not robbed the bank and that these people knew nothing about the night before.

Wellfleet

Mary MacDonald, '39

I long to be on the Bay road
To feel the sand beneath my feet,
To see the glint like steel
Of shining sun on water,
To hear the gulls' sharp cry,
Hoarse crackles of the crows,
Sweet melody of tiny birds
Lingering on the air.

I long to be upon the dunes
For there the taste of salt is known;
The roar of surf is heard;
Or stand on graying sand
In air, stung by salt and pine;
With these visions round me
There is great longing in my heart
For I belong to the Bay road.

Treasure

Joan Fallon, '39

The man stood on the hill and downward
gazed,
And joy within him rose. "All this is mine,"
He cried. Before him rolled the valley, hazed
With mist. The slopes were green with pine
And fir, and through the fields the river smiled
On yellow wheat. This nodded back in turn,
And nature glowed. He thought, the man,
"Here piled
Is my great wealth. How sad it is to burn
The candle of one's life in quest of gold,
To drudge and slave, perhaps to cheat a man,
To grind and sweat—and never God behold.
The goal is money and for this a plan
Is merciless. For me all treasure lies Down there. It is eternal—in my eyes."

Our Friend—the Ground-hog

Elois Fairbanks, '39

That the decision of an insignificant animal is waited for with such anxiety is really amazing! Though the ground-hog makes only a prediction, it is a weighty one. Though he is sometimes wrong, he still holds the respect of many people.

Either there will be an early spring, or there will not be an early spring! These two—and only these two suppositions are possible. The solution is determined by the ground-hog, who is entirely ignorant of the fact that such a geometric law exists. His responsibility is great, but he does not know it. Perhaps it's better this way, for if he were aware of his important station, he might demand payment for his services. Instead, he leads a languid sort of life,—asking only for food and shelter, and not knowing the meaning of wealth and renown.

So, after a long winter of sleep, the little fellow awakes, stretches, rubs his sleep-filled eyes, and emerges into the almost forgotten fresh air. He does not know that he is being watched carefully. Not that he would particularly care! Everyone is more or less oblivious to such goings-on after a long, heavy sleep.

As soon as he is wide enough awake, he looks around him. Perhaps, if the sun is too bright, he turns to get the blinding daggers out of his eyes. But, alas, now he is confronted by his shadow, a huge thing looming threateningly before him. Feeling that the monster in his dreams has become a reality, he scurries back into his hole. And so the world prepares itself for more winter.

On the other hand, if ground-hog day (incidentally, I find it difficult to understand how the ground-hog manages to be on time each year without the aid of an alarm clock!) is dull and sunless, our friend predicts an early spring. This is the time when summer plans are made, and sometimes, as in this year, are properly shattered by the winter's worst blizzard!

The ground-hog is almost as popular and welcome as Santa Claus. True,—his gift is not a solid thing to be admired, (for one could hardly tie the spring up in holiday wrappings and ribbon,) but it is a universal gift nevertheless:—one which might have written on its tag, "Open very soon," or "Do not open for at least two months."

Slanguage

Robert Peirce, '39

If you get in the groove and pick some pears while the cats are beating out a hot lick, you're a corny jiggeroo and no ickie. So goes the modern swing talk that's as new as tomorrow.

"Sparking" was the slang for modern "necking" that held its stance until about 1920 when "necking" came in. Then in '36 someone originated "pitchin the woo;" but that didn't last.

Perhaps back in 1892 some one might have said "23-skiddo" to you. Then in 1925

"beat it;" 1935 "scram." The modern version is just a quick jerk of the thumb as one does in thumbing a ride. That all sums up to "Please remove your body from my presence."

Heck, darnit, gee whiz, oh nuts, rats, fooey, and for Petes' sake if you don't slang a little you're lunny, bats, balmy, nerts, and stuff.

That's Slanguage!

P. S. I'm not slingin' any baloney to you, Toots, it's the real McCoy.

SENIOR PORTFOLIO

To Eleanor - With Love

Freda Fowler, '39

We miss the laughter of your shining eyes,
Your quiet, sweet manner that we knew so well;

The sunshine that you gave us through your golden hair —

How we miss you is so hard to tell.

Our gallant girl has crossed the great divide,
Where mysteries of life will all unfurl;
Her fondest dream she's won, we cannot
hide,

For now in heaven rests our golden girl.

*"A man of such a genial mood,
The heart of all things be embraced."*

"Dave" is an indispensable member of our High school band. He, very successfully, played the amusing rôle of the father in our Senior Play. People who know him admit that he is far from quiet. "Dave" also is a promising "miler." Mass. State will be lucky to claim him next year where his flashing smile and his friendliness will take him to the top.

ENID MARGUERITE MacGRAY

Date of Birth—May 29, 1921

Place of Birth—Newton, Mass.

"Yet in earnest or in jest Ever keeping truth abreast."

The Senior Class Play humor was supplied by "E". To hear her outside of school one would think that she was trying to be a second Florence Nightingale. She may not always be at the top in sports, but she's there when you need her. It will be good to see "E" back on her bicycle next year as a P. G.

Date of Birth—January 7, 1922

Place of Birth—Needham, Mass.

"Silence often persuades when speaking fails."

Whenever Mary does something, we are sure it will be done well. This has been proved by the number of times her name has appeared on the honor roll. We wonder what takes Mary to Newton so often. Is it because of a blond? Mary's pleasant personality will be an asset to some business man next year.

ROBERT MILLAR, JR.

Date of Birth—February 27, 1921

"Determine that the thing can and shall be done, and then we shall find a way."

"Red's" quiet personality is quite often interrupted by his great desire to make things hum. He's very active outside of school, also. "Red" just doesn't seem to like sports and girls. He can take them or leave 'em. His face just matches his hair if any girl talks to him. Next year "Red" plans to go to the Bentley School of Accounting in Boston.

Here's a bird who's hard to kill, and we're glad, because our class wouldn't be complete without Lenny. He makes friends easily, his broad smile and pleasing personality assure him of that. In track season, you'll see his racing legs carrying him to honors. The rest of the time, he's doing honors with a certain little Junior named Mary. "Murph" plans to return to Needham High next fall and take a P. G. course.

Earl spends most of his time nowadays in his darkroom, and if you've seen any of his work you'll know the reason why. Aside from photography, he unconsciously causes many feminine hearts to beat faster with his movie star looks. That doesn't bother Earl, however; we guess he just can't spare the time for 'em.

Besides winning a berth on our football squad, and pitcher on the baseball team, Jack held the honor of captaincy and high scorer of our spectacular basketball quintet. We understand he abhors the fairer sex—correct, Jack? Next fall Jack will register at Mount Hermon, after which some lucky college will have his presence.

STANLEY TROWBRIDGE WOOD

Date of Birth—March 17, 1921

Place of Birth—Needham, Mass.

"A true friend to the true."

Stanley is another fellow who is very much envied for his ability to "subdue the sliding slats." He is a good friend and companion, and with that ready smile we're sure he'll go far in his choice of work.

Senior Play Committee, Home Room Program.

MARY ELIZABETH WOODWARD

Date of Birth—May 30, 1921

Place of Birth—Dover, Mass.

"A warm smile — a warm heart."

Here comes a dark Senior with a cheerful smile — why, it's our Betty! "Bet" is always ready and willing to help anyone, and do we love to have her! It's no wonder "Bet's" charm has touched hearts near and far, especially New Hampshire way. Betty has done a neat job as chairman of the "They Say" Board of "The Advocate", and she'll do even better at Katherine Gibbs School next year.

RICHARD HOWARD YOULDEN

Date of Birth—October 25, 1921

Place of Birth—Norwood, Mass.

" 'Tis goodwill makes intelligence."

Dick is the boy we all must thank for putting over our Senior play, "Growing Pains", with such a bang! Dick came in to us from Norwood in his Junior year and has proved himself a "regular guy" and very easy to get along with. (You might ask Margaret MacCallum to verify that.) If Dick does as well at the University of Maine as he did at Needham High, he'll be doin' O. K!

JOSEPH BERNARD YURICK

Date of Birth—May 2, 1921

Place of Birth—Newton Upper Falls, Mass.

"A good fellow, with impetuosity and hesitation, boldness and diffidence, action and dreaming, curiously mixed in him."

"Joe" was our worthy wrestling manager this year, and notice how the wrestling team went places! We hear that Joe is very much interested in golf and that he swings a mean club. We'll be cheering for Joe in whatever he tries.

JOHN D. ALDEN

Date of Birth—February 10, 1921

Place of Birth—Needham, Mass.

"Experts of yesterday must stand aside for students of tomorrow."

"Jacque" is a popular and cheerful fellow always looking for a little fun. He goes in for all sports in an enthusiastic manner, especially down on South Street. He lends a good deal of his knowledge to his classes in Math and Physics. John's hopes for next year are centered around Tufts.

Glee Club (4), Home Room Program (2).

WILLIAM CAMERON

Date of Birth—August 31, 1921

Place of Birth—Medford, Mass.

"Silence is a friend that will never betray."

"Bill" is a quiet person, so do not let his red hair mislead you. Reports from the geography and physics classes tell us that for all his quietness, "Bill" can give a good account of himself when called on. He plans to work next year. Lots of luck to you anyway, "Bill"!

BENJAMIN MILLS IIIrd

Date of Birth—November 11, 1921

Place of Birth—New York City, N. Y.

"A merry heart that laughs at care."

Without "Bud's" witty remarks around school, Needham High just wouldn't have its usual pep. Bud's a member of that irrepressible Youlden-Fay-Dooley-Goodwin gang that seems to specialize in Sophomore girls. Bud plans to attend Duke next year where he'll continue to catch the girls with his Fred Astaire dancing.

Senior Play (4), Gym Team (3), Christmas Play (4), Wrestling (2, 3).

HENRY FRANCIS MINKLE

Date of Birth—December 19, 1921

Place of Birth—Boston, Mass.

"Silence never betrays you."

If Henry doesn't deliver your morning paper to you, you probably will hardly notice him nor will you know what a fine fellow he is. However, our bet is that Henry will be a successful business man some day.

MURIEL ANN PETERSON

Date of Birth—March 26, 1921

Place of Birth—Dorchester, Mass.

"Few things are impossible to diligence and skill."

We are grateful to Muriel for entertaining discussions in class. They certainly aren't dull. Muriel has a keen interest in psychology, especially child psychology, and she hopes to go on working with children next year.

MARION CHASE PIKE

Date of Birth—October 26, 1920

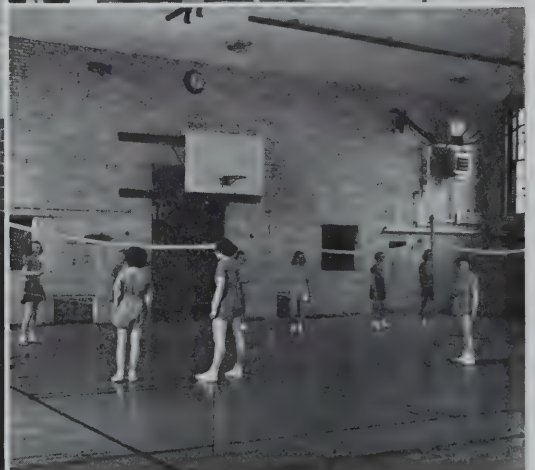

Place of Birth—Needham, Mass.

"It's a pleasant world we live in, a very pleasant world."

"Pikie" is celebrated for her sparkling wit and ready comeback. And you better watch your step or she'll take you for a ride; she's always kidding someone. Marion is planning to attend Acadia University in Nova Scotia next year.

A Verse Speaking group was formed this year under the direction of Miss Dodge. They performed at Christmas time and as we go to press are preparing for a concert.

The Junior and Senior High Schools held their annual Exhibition on April 28 and 29 in the Senior Gymnasium. It proved very successful with all of the departments attracting much attention.

Just what is required to be able to join that exclusive lunch-period group that meets at the far end of the hall?

* * * *

That Junior girl was surprised when she found herself underneath a shower in the boys' locker room the night of the girls' gym meet—especially when someone else turned the shower on!!

We wonder what blonde girl from Wellesley has a crush on Arnold Silsby, and carries his picture around with her?

A Musical Festival for the benefit of instruments for our band was held on May 19. The different musical organizations taking part were the orchestra, the band, Boys' Glee Club, Girls' Glee Club, and a Junior High Mixed Chorus.

Unless a certain Senior slows down, there will be about five persons fewer in high school some morning.

Three Junior girls have obtained for themselves the name of "The Three Musketeers." Why?

By the looks of the home room plays, Needham High School is developing quite a few Romeos.

To the "Sweeping Swing" of Bill Pollard's Orchestra, members of N. H. S., danced from eight to twelve at the annual
 Junior Prom, held in the gym on February
 3rd, 1939. The decorations on Interplanetary Service were quite unusual. Everything was done in blue and white, with blue cellophane over the lights. The committee heads were Roger Nutt, Orchestra; Janice Brooke, Decoration; David Mastropieri, Program; Marjorie McCulloch, Refreshment; and Arnold MacIntosh, Tickets.

"Sainty" has surely been giving Stan the runaround. Oh, well, a little competition won't hurt anyone.

* * * *

The D. A. R. Award went to Barbara
 Hopkins, who certainly deserved it. Congratulations, "Hoppie".

* * * *

Needham High School was specially honored when four members of our school were awarded berths on the Bay State Interscholastic League's All Star Hockey Team.
 Our heartiest congratulations to "Bob"
 Schmalz, "Bud" Hedges, "Mike" Androko-vich, and "Eddie" Kerrissey.

Too bad the Jitterbug Club couldn't get enough exercise outside of school — then they might be able to keep still during school.

Many "femmes" have made bids for a very popular blond Senior boy, but a "little

How many of us have been paged over the Arena "Mike" as Fred Heald was when

A certain P. G. Miss has been very popu-

For a change, Ribbon Day proved a success with a large assortment of bows.

Two Junior girls stopped traffic one Saturday afternoon, and caused quite a commotion in the theatre one Friday evening with three-foot feathers in their hats.

* * * *

"Bill" Flanagan certainly showed everyone how "IT" should be done in "Buddy Buys An Orchid".

* * * *

Why is a Junior girl called "The Shadow" by some of her friends?

* * * *

Our basketball team deserves much credit for their successful season and for gaining a berth in the Tech Tournament. Good work, boys.

* * * *

The work exhibited this year in the Boys' Gym Meet was exceptionally good. The gymnasium was crowded to the doors especially with feminine forms who came to see their heroes strut off their skill. Credit is due to Mr. Claxton and his assistants for this entertaining and worthwhile event.

* * * *

One of our most bashful Seniors has finally fallen hard — right into the Sophomore class. Maybe "Lindy" Stockwell could explain.

* * * *

The long and short of it, "Phyll" Cook and "Franny" Dooley.

* * * *

Who is the Sophomore girl in Miss Harrington's home room who still takes a teddie bear to bed with her?

* * * *

"Devie" and Tommy, another Sophomore-Senior combination, seem to be hitting it off quite well lately.

Anticipation — The lunch-room when the largest class ever to have been there, arrives next year.

Wonder if the new rule about loitering after school was directed at Helene Roissing? Three guesses why she stays!

Why must John Dodd and Joe Glassett fight over the same girls?

* * * *

At last someone in Home Room 309 has succeeded in getting on the honor-roll. The distinction goes to James Sanborn.

* * * *

A new Dance Club was formed under the able direction of Miss Carroll this year. Although this club did not make a public appearance it proved immensely interesting and entertaining to the girls.

* * * *

Bob Buckley's got quite an idea when he moves from the front seat to take a back one just to sit near an acquaintance that he is friendly with. All this happened in Math class.

* * * *

Can anyone think of the one thing in life that Mr. Frost wants us to remember?

* * * *

Smart winter scenes were the background for the Senior Prom which was held on January 6. The corners were filled with evergreen trees, and the ceiling was covered with alternate rows of white and green crepe paper. Music with a distinctive style was furnished by Bob Tucker and his orchestra. Credit is due to Eleanor Nelson, Isabelle Denfeld, Leonard Murphy, Dell Gates, and Ruth Rodgers who made this an outstanding prom.

* * * *

What three very popular brunette Senior girls are always seen "having a wonderful time" together! Why don't others follow this good example and make life more fun?

* * * *

Is Jack Flanagan as unaware of girls as he'd like to have us think?

* * * *

We wonder where all the spoons come from that the girls of N. H. S. are "totin" around. Did they come from the family "silver case," or were they "purloined" from "The Ritz" as memories of happy nights? Take a look at the one Jane Biggart wears.

Imagine it! A couple of Senior girls whisper their secrets at lunch so that the other girls at the table won't hear them.

* * * *

Just what is the great attraction that the out-of-towners have for our Senior boys?

* * * *

"The Gutter" — all dirt collects here! — the appropriate title of a neighboring high school's "They Say" column.

* * * *

A pretty blonde Sophomore girl may be seen almost any Wednesday afternoon from 2:20 till 2:45 peering in the Chem. Lab. at a certain fair Junior.

* * * *

The Class of '41 was very sorry when "Ruthie" Sherwood moved to New Jersey. We might add that perhaps certain alumni were also sorry to see the "family" move.

Outstanding news event of the year. A certain P. G. boy falling asleep in a study hall of girls.

* * * *

Lenny Murphy still seems to be hanging around that lower corridor locker. It couldn't be love, could it? No, we don't mean with the locker, either!!!

* * * *

In a colorful "swing" atmosphere, fifty couples danced to the music of Charles Shirley and his Rhythm Serenaders at the annual Sophomore Dance held April 14. Colored spotlights played on yellow, violet and green streamers, while silhouette posters of popular swing maestros adorned the walls. Much credit goes to the chairmen of the committees: Virginia Hall, Blanche Worth, Betty Williams, Laurence Arra, and Frank Kramer.

Janet Brownville has returned to Needham after a couple of years in Brookline. Although her heart is still in Brookline, we are certainly happy to have her back with us again.

* * * *

We wonder why "Hainsie" never knows the correct answers in history last period? Maybe the basketball player who sits a couple of seats in front of her is the reason.

* * * *

Have you seen "Len" Murphy's reversible coat? It is considered the latest in men's styles, and it doesn't even cover his knees!

Charles Shirley, '38, recently made a recording with Harry James, who was formerly with Benny Goodman's band.

The Alumni Department visited several graduates of Needham High School to find out what they remembered and liked most about their school days. What do you think you'll remember about our school five or ten years from now?

Dr. Charles Donahue, Class of 1925, advises all high school students to take the college course whether or not they plan to attend college. This Class of 1925 was the first class to graduate from the building which is now the Junior High School. There were 60 members of the class. At that time there were football and baseball teams. The basketball team did not play other schools and the hockey team wasn't recognized by the school. The most outstanding thing Dr. Donahue remembers of Needham High School is "Jack" Frost.

Miss Betty Moore, Class of '36, who now attends Emerson College, remembers, in particular, Miss Fessenden (Math. being her favorite subject), and she admires the way the Commencement exercises are carried out. Miss Moore believes that Speech Arts and Dramatic Clubs should be important as an extra school activity. Her favorite activity was the annual Gym Meet.

Miss Kenney, Class of '30, who is now a teacher in our high school, recalled her school days as a student at Needham High School. What impressed her most was the spirit of friendliness between the teachers and the students. She said that this was helpful in getting ahead in school. She admired the way all students took part in various activities and seemed to enjoy working together. Miss Kenney suggests that students do assigned work each night, and who knows,—one of us may be President!

Miss Cowdrey, Class of 1928, says the things she remembers most about Needham High School is Miss Churchill's English class and Mr. Frost's history class.

Professor Morris, Professor of Sociology, College of Liberal Arts at Boston University, remembers his former teachers: Miss Karnan, who taught German and is now teaching in the California School for the Blind; Mr. Hutchinson, former principal; and Byron C. Merry who succeeded him. Mr. Merry is now retired and living in Wareham. There were then about 165 pupils in the school. Professor Morris believes that every student in high school should learn to make the most of himself and prepare for future needs.

Did You Know That:

There was an East High School and a West High School in 1864 in Needham? The West High School was situated in what is now a part of Wellesley.

There were around thirty-two students in each of these High Schools?

The Emery Grover School was formerly a Needham High School? It was built in 1898.

The Junior High was the High School after the Emery Grover School?

The Class of 1898 had only seven graduates, the smallest number of graduates in the history of the school?

The Class of 1936 had the largest number of graduates since 1898, 149?

Miss Kenney and Miss Cowdrey are graduates of the Needham High School?

The five boys from the Needham High School who are going to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology were all on the honor roll for the first semester? The boys are George Schroeder, Gilbert Tougas, Kimball Loomis, Edward Fettes, and Gilbert Andrews.

Andrew Robert Hamilton, the first operator to receive the wireless reports from the flying ship Cavalier when it plunged into the Atlantic Ocean, is a graduate of Needham High School?

Mrs. Caroline Mills of Warren Street, is the oldest living graduate of the Needham High School? She graduated in 1868.

William Barta, Jr., a freshman at Colby College, has been awarded his freshman numerals in hockey. He has also been appointed one of the managers of the freshman and sophomore hockey teams.

Robert Marshall, who graduated with the Class of 1936, has been elected Circulation Manager of the Northeastern News for the coming year.

Kathleen Johnson was voted the most talkative girl by this year's graduating class of the Boston University College of Liberal Arts.

Norma Doane, Class of 1938, took a trip in April, with her sister, to Maryland and Washington, D. C.

What Usually Happens

Norman Palmstrom, '39

The ball was resting in mid-field
About the forty-six,
When "Ralphy" called for "C," fifteen.
With Bob out back to kick.

Up to the line of scrimmage came
The team of Needham High.
The crowd got up to see the feat,
As cheers rolled to the sky.

Now Captain Schmalz was back to punt;
A handsome lad was he.
The quarter-back called two-four-six,
But Bob, he couldn't see.

The ball was snapped to eager hands,
And with such solemn ease, —
But, no, he didn't kick the ball,
He only fanned the breeze.

Over 2,000 fans watched Needham conquer B. C. High by the score of 4 to 0. Early in the first chukker, Androckovich took a pass from Lumsden and scored a goal. Two minutes later the second line was able to collect another. A minute before the second period was over, Hedges with Schmalz's assist scored a point. Early in the last frame, Schmalz scored a goal on a pass from Lumsden.

NEEDHAM 6 WELLESLEY 1

Needham High became the sole leader of the Bay State Hockey League when they shellacked Wellesley to the tune of 6 to 1. Hedges scored two goals and made two assists, and Lumsden, Androckovich, Arra, and Schmalz each scored one. Most of the Needham boys saw action in this game.

NEEDHAM 3 WALPOLE 1

Before a large crowd of Needham rooters, the Needham sextet took Walpole by the score of 3 to 1 to remain at the head of the League. Bob Schmalz scored twice and Hedges scored the other goal. The Needham High band played at this game.

NEEDHAM 1 WATERTOWN 0

Needham High retained their lead in the league by dropping Watertown by the score of 1 to 0. Within the third minute of play, Hedges took a pass from Androckovich, and then Needham scored no more. It took some fine saves later in the game by Kerrissey to quell the Watertown fierce attack.

NEEDHAM 5 WALTHAM 1

Needham took their sixth game in a row this time from Waltham still holding their lead in the league. Hedges scored two goals, and Schmalz, Allen, and Nicholson each scored one.

FRAMINGHAM 2 NEEDHAM 0

Needham lost their final game of the season and also the lead of the league to Framingham by the score of 2 to 0. No matter how hard Needham tried to score, they couldn't quite push over the goals.

NEEDHAM 4 WALPOLE 2

Needham put themselves in the running in the play-offs by taking Walpole by the score of 4 to 2. Again Hedges scored two goals, while Allen and Androckovich each scored one. Needham's superior backchecking held Walpole at bay.

FRAMINGHAM 4 NEEDHAM 2

Needham let slip the championship to Framingham when they lost by the score of 4 to 2. Hedges and Arra each scored a goal in the first period to take the lead, but Needham couldn't stop the powerful Framingham attack.

Bob Schmalz was elected the most popular player of the league by an overwhelming vote. He also was elected the captain of the Needham team.

Gym Meet

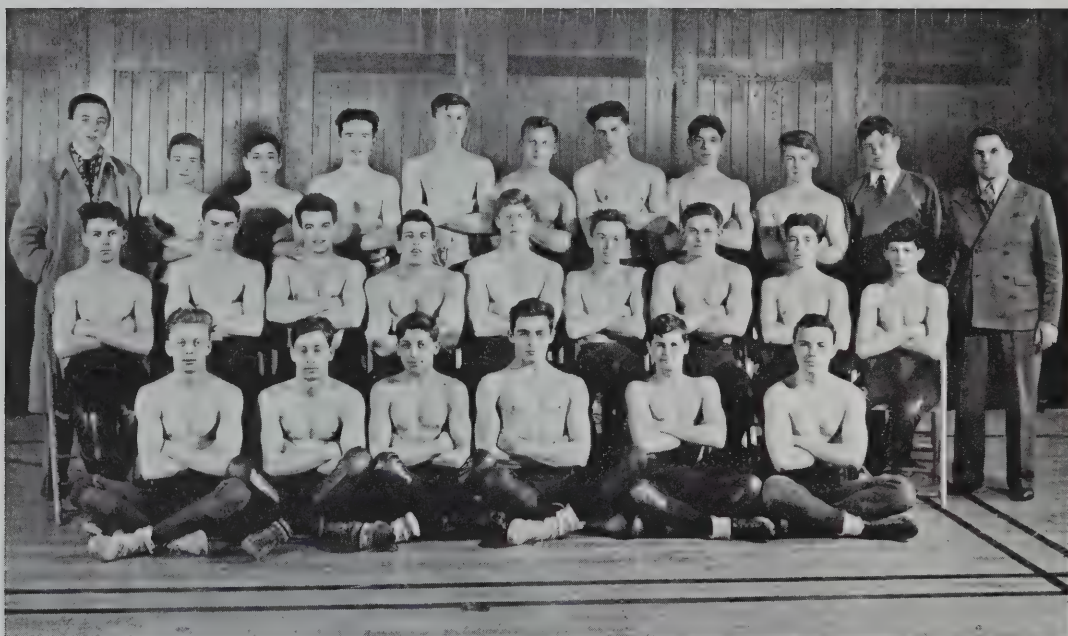

This year's exhibition was somewhat less spectacular, but fully as enjoyable as some of the preceding ones.

The games provided many laughs, and through all the dust of battle the Seniors and Sophomores split the honors evenly. The Juniors, however, had the marching down to perfection. The Gym Team ran off all their exercises on the pieces of apparatus smoothly, amid much applause. In addition to routine events the State Baton-Twirling Champion, Mr. Bill Wright, presented a baffling display of tricks.

Front row: B. Cronkhite, E. Heald, O. Nardone, J. Glassett, W. Plaisted, I. McNally.

Wrestling

The wrestling team ran up against some tough teams to beat in their Old Colony League and lost more than they won. However, Mr. DeFazio worked hard to develop material for next year, and we feel certain that next season will be different. As far as individual men went, Co-captain Bob Fettes was crowned State Champion in his weight class; and Zaffini and Goodwin were State Champions in second team competition. With both of the latter boys returning, it indeed looks bright for next year.

Golf

This year's golf team bids fair to repeat their winning the Norfolk County Golf League the second straight year. Already they have won all their matches, beating Canton twice and North Quincy by large scores. The swingers this year are Tony Loback, Mike O'Hanion, Bud Hedges, Ed Lowery, Walt Prescott and John Sammarco. They're going great and have our best wishes.

as soon as another one rolls around we may hope for a victory.

Track

The Blue and White track team got off to a rather disappointing start in competition by dropping their first meet to North Quincy by a 56-14 count. However, weather and lack of experience were against them, so we may hope for much better results later in the season.

Baseball

The baseball team has a wealth of returning veterans to comprise what should be a fine team this year. The infield is well-represented by Tim Coughlin at first, Ralph Leader or Norm Palmstrom at second, Larry Arra or Charlie Perry at short and the erstwhile Butler Fantegrossi at third. Catching are Bob Schmalz and Jack Flanagan alternating behind the plate while the pitching this year is largely from the port side with Jack Wood, Franny Carpenger and Doug Stowell heading the present list.

Back row: D. Allen, F. Wilcox, J. Nelson, C. Wertheim, D. Rugen.

Tennis

Our tennis team apparently has a bright future as there are several better-than-average players on the squad. Dick Rice and Stan Rice, Andy Bailey, and a wealth of Junior material make up a very formidable outfit on any court. The boys have played a successful match recently, and

GIRLS' SPORTS

Basketball

The girls' basketball season was packed with excitement and uncertainty; no one knew what the next moment would bring. This makes the second year that the Seniors have had an undefeated season. Although the Juniors won only one game, they worked hard and had many moral victories. The Sophomores rallied to finish the season with three games to their credit and two losses.

NATICK NEEDHAM

The Seniors' first encounter was with a snappy Natick team. The knowledge that Natick had swamped Wellesley did not stop Needham from winning 27-21.

The Juniors' first game of the season was a very exciting one and was close right up to the end with a score of 17-28 in favor of the Natick team.

Due to the school schedule, the Sophomores competed with the Natick Juniors' second team and ran the tally up to 16-11.

NORWOOD NEEDHAM

By defeating Norwood last year by one point, the Seniors met this peppy team again on their home floor. Both teams desired to win, but Norwood received only the small end of the score which was 18-9.

The Juniors played a lively game with Norwood here, but were defeated again with a score of 26-17.

When the Sophomores played basketball with Norwood, they were defeated 17 to 26; in spite of the defeat the Needham girls played well.

WALTHAM NEEDHAM

At Waltham, the Seniors played a fast and consistent game to win their third straight game 17 to 6.

The Juniors lacked that certain something at the Waltham game, for they were defeated by a score of 23 to 4. Although they played hard, the Waltham girls were just too much for them.

The Waltham Sophomores won when they played Needham with a score of 13 to 3. Our girls put up a good fight even though they didn't win.

WELLESLEY NEEDHAM

This was the first time that we had played in Wellesley's new gym. The Senior's teamwork proved to be too much for Wellesley, and the game resulted in a score of 22 to 8.

After their defeat by Waltham, the Juniors came through with flying colors with a score of 9-6 at Wellesley.

The score of the Needham-Wellesley Sophomore basketball game was Needham 22, Wellesley 7. It was a good game, and every girl played well.

CAMBRIDGE LATIN NEEDHAM

Our keenest rival was the Cambridge Latin team which threatened our undefeated season. Nevertheless, after a hotly-contested game, the Seniors were victorious with the tally 22 to 12.

This game was the closest game of the season, and it was a bitter disappointment to the Juniors to lose 11 to 10.

In their last game of the season, the Sophomores trounced the ninth graders 21 to 8, with a comfortable lead all the way.

WELLESLEY VARSITY
NEEDHAM VARSITY

Our girls chalked up another scoring for good old Needham High February 17th here in the gym. A final score of 19 to 13 was reached for the first team at the end of an exciting game, and Wellesley discovered that we really had something with which to drench their fire. The second team was not so successful, for after a determined fight, they reluctantly gave the opposing girls the benefit of one point and consequently the game. Both teams played plucky basketball, and Needham High is proud of their efforts.

The captains for the 1939 season were as follows: Sophomores, Betty Gilfoy; Juniors, Lorna MacGray; Seniors, Barbara Hopkins; and Varsity, Bunny Colburn.

Dorothy Fader and Virginia Schroeder were certainly great managers and deserve heaps of credit.

Best o'luck, basketball team of '40!

Girls' Gym Meet

The 15th annual girls' gym meet attracted a large crowd on March 31st in the high school gym. It turned out to be a great success with the Seniors in the lead.

After the entrance march, the Sophomores performed their exercises; then came Junior marching. The finals of the aerial dart contest furnished excitement for all. This was followed by the Senior exercises which were excellently presented. The Sophomores marching with chins up lent a very military aspect to the program. Apparatus, Junior exercises, Senior marching, and tumbling brought up the next number which was a jump rope routine.

A colorful Spanish tango dance was effective. Something new and different was perfected by the Leaders' Club girls as they rendered a rhythmical routine to the music of "The Umbrella Man." Two American dances, a cowboy dance and a cake walk tap, were next executed.

The Leaders' Club march as always proved the main feature of the evening. Every one knew when the relays came that winning or losing them decided the scores of the final competitive events. A short basketball game between the Seniors and Juniors closed the program as the judges made their decision. The Seniors came through victorious for the second consecutive year with a score of $89\frac{1}{3}$. The Juniors and Sophomores had a real battle to see who would come out on top. The scores were $78\frac{5}{6}$, $81\frac{3}{4}$ respectively. The Sophomores are to be congratulated.

A lovely bouquet of spring flowers and a necklace were given as a token of appreciation to our gym teacher, Miss Carroll.

Track

As yet the girls have been unable to use the track because of the boys' baseball games and track meets. Later on in the season, an interclass track meet will be held. The events will consist of the fifty-yard dash, a baseball throw, the standing broad jump, the running broad jump, a basketball throw, the running high jump, and relay races.

Tennis

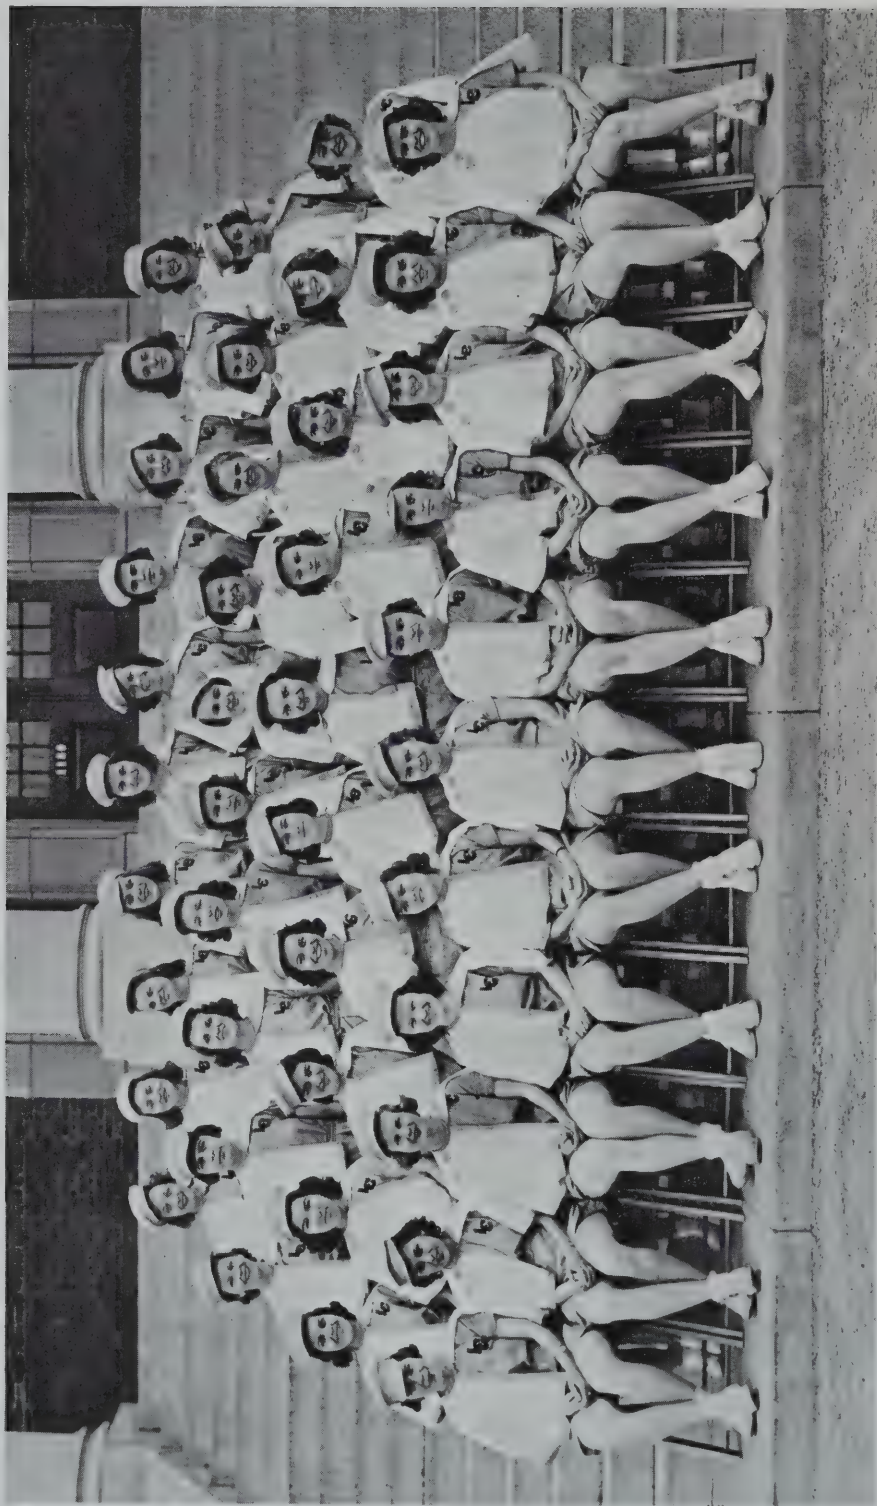

There is a great deal of interest in tennis this year. Ninety-seven girls composed of beginners, intermediate, and tennis team players came out for practice! But the lack of courts in Needham makes impossible much progress in what might otherwise be a major sport for the girls. In the near future, we hope that some means may be found for providing more courts for our use.

The tennis team has very good material this year. Despite this fact, it has lost its first two matches to Norwood and Framingham. The games have been well played, however, and in most cases have been lost by a very narrow margin. Although the tennis team has had this poor start, they are looking forward to a bright future. Miss Carroll is ably assisted by Louise Carre, a very dependable and cheerful manager. The girls from last year's team still here are J. Thomas, T. Colburn, I. Denfeld, R. Burton, B. St. Clair, B. Hopkins, M. Cleaves, and J. Haszard.

Softball

Sixty girls have shown a lot of enthusiasm for softball. The organization of four teams took place, and they are playing a round robin tournament. At the close of the season, the scores will be added to determine the winning team.

Since our last issue, the Exchange Editor's desk has gradually become piled high with many interesting and amusing magazines from various schools. In looking them over, we have divided them into certain groups according to their outstanding characteristics.

Over here on our left we have the RED FOX from Foxboro, Mass. This is a very neat little magazine with some extremely good literary material. Also in this class are the CYCLE from Woodsville, N. H., and HILL QUILL from Walpole, Mass.

We are greatly amused with the STUDENT CRIER, Framingham, Mass., because of its humor. In the COURIER, Hyde Park, Mass., an illustrated poem entitled "Minnie the Whale", provides great amusement for us as do the modernistic nursery rhymes in THE REVIEW, Lowell, Mass.

Every time a copy of the ORACLE, Rennselaer, N. Y., arrives, we are very anxious to find out what the main theme is. Usually one idea or theme is expressed throughout the magazine. In the last two issues the topics have been Spain and radio.

We are very pleased to welcome THE LAWRENCIAN, Falmouth, Mass., among our exchanges. This is a new magazine, but it is certainly splendid in every detail.

In the MIRROR, Waltham, Mass., we find some amusing pictures of popular couples around school. The face of one person in each couple is left blank for the reader to guess. THE RED CAP, North Attleboro, Mass., also has some excellent snapshots on its pages.

Many of the magazines which we received have articles that would not come under any particular heading; so we class them as special features. In the METEOR, Berlin, N. H., we find a number of interesting and educational articles on youth organizations, such as the N. Y. A., 4-H Clubs, Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, Youth Hostels, Camp Fire Girls, and a very good article on "How Youth Serves the Community."

The "Shopper's Guide" in the BLUE and GOLD, Montoursville, Pa., is a very unusual type of advertising for high school magazines.

THE SPOTLIGHT, Cranford, N. J., presents school news and gossip by the conversation of two old ladies, Sadie and Emma. Another unique idea for presenting this news is adopted by the WAMPA-TUCK, Braintree, Mass. It has "Ferdinand" relating all school gossip.

From the ITEM Dorchester, Mass., we have

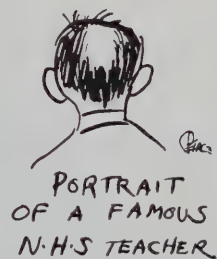

"If late with regularity,
You'll lose your popularity,
And there will be no subtlety
In what you hear from our faculty."

Charlie Stevens was called upon to translate from French to English. After going along smoothly for a while he came to this sentence: "On a nommé le petit garçon, Jacques." He confidently translated, "The little boy was called Jack-ass."

On His Assignments

By N. Richmond Leach

When I consider how my life is spent,
 Ere twelve long years in these dark schools
 and wide,
 And those few pleasures which are death to
 hide
 Lodged with me useless, though my soul
 more bent
 To serve therewith my teacher, and present
 A good report lest Pa returning chide,—
 "Teacher exacts day-labour, fun denied?"
 I fondly ask. But patience, to prevent
 That murmur, soon replies: "Teacher doth need
 Neither your work, nor her own tests. Who best
 Bear her mild tasks, they serve her best. Her state
 Is queenly: thousands at her bidding speed
 And post o'er book and paper without rest.
 They also flunk who only stand and wait."
